The control of the co

I would like to introduce a very interesting publication Published in 2011 that is dealing wit the defect coverage of bones and tendons.

Titel:

One-stage defect closure of deperiosted bone and exposed tendons with MatriDerm* and skin transplantation. Possibilities and limitations

For the study please follow here

MatriDerm[®] and the interaction with antiseptics

MatriDerm* consists of native collagen and elastin. Both components are proteins which generally could interact with several chemical substances, for example antiseptics. Interactions between a matrix and an antiseptic are normal and also known for other biological matrices. They could denaturize and destroy the protein function irreversibly.

This means the advantages of MatriDerm® due to the Advanced Cryosafe™ Method could not be realised: Initiation of native mode of action and resulting in optimal function.

Typical and critical agents which could be found in the operation theatre are for example:

- Acids
- Alkaline bases
- Iodine
- HydrogenPeroxide (H₂O₂)

Therefore, the existing "Instruction for use" summarizes it in one sentence:

[...] "It is advised not to use antiseptics containing iodine in conjunction with MatriDerm*. Caustic agents, which alter the proteins and impair the function of collagen matrices, must not be used with MatriDerm*."
